any of the squads, and therefore there will be no minority owners involved in the league. McMahon is the main boss, and everyone within the league will answer to him directly.

"We are a single entity, and there is no franchise model," says McMahon in his live streaming announcement of the league's big return that took place on Jan. 25.

Now this is where things can get very interesting for all of Orange County. With McMahon at the full helm of the XFL, and taking full ownership of each team, and all of their operations; he is therefore investing all of his own personal money into the league himself. This means that if he brings a franchise to any city around America, he is going to be footing the bill with his own personal money and investments. It is not going to cost the local American taxpayer anything, and it will not cost the local legislation anything either. Therefore local governments should see this as a major opportunity to land a positive, family friendly form of entertainment for their region, all while providing new jobs for those residents. Orange County already has Angels baseball and Ducks hockey, both championship-caliber teams in their own right. Why not add a professional football franchise to further enrich the area, and further build the sense of community spirit with, say, the Los Angeles Xtreme, or a whole new franchise for that matter?

How can the everyday local Orange County resident get involved in the process in trying to sway a professional football team to make a new home here within our region many may ask? Well, this is where McMahon's social media campaign comes into play. With the #XFL2020 Twitter feed, McMahon is calling on all American football fans from all over the country to voice their wants, concerns, input, and suggestions for the league's kickoff in 2020. With this being said, ordinary citizens can form a petition to advertise for their city to sway XFL league executives to bring a team to their neck of the woods. Orange County, are you listening?

McMahon had the following to say when asked about this concept. "We are going to go where fans want us to go wherever there is more interest." McMahon would continue the conversation with, "You want to play football where football is played in stadiums, there may be a situation where we play in a baseball stadium, or something like that if a football stadium is not available in that market."

Surely there have to be a few destinations in mind here in our region to house a football team with the previous allusions given above. If citizens demand it, they will come.

"Certainly Orange County, especially Anaheim, can create more jobs with this opportunity," says Jonathan Mathis, who attended Cypress College and is now a reporter for SoCal Sports Chronicle.

"Anaheim has been struggling with poverty for some time now. Having a new football team can create economic growth for them and all of Orange County. With an expansion league or team here it will inspire the large population here that are in need of employment. Many are in desperate need of employment."

Still, Mathis does have some reservations about the idea of a football team in Orange County. He has a stern warning to all who would be potentially involved in the probability of bringing a team to the region. "They would need to take into consideration of what sells here in California. Orange County fans demand a team that will produce wins, and will galvanize their fan base. If the team is

You should also be aware that the lien being auctioned off may be a junior lien. If you are the highest bidder at the auction, you are or may be responsible for paying off all liens senior to the lien being auctioned off, before you can receive clear title to the property. You are encouraged to investigate the existence, priority, and size of outstanding liens that may exist on this property by contacting the county recorder's office or a title insurance company, either of which may charge you a fee for this information. If you consult either of these resources, you should be aware that the same lender may hold more than one mortgage or deed of trust on this property.
